"I don't know how you do it?"

Given the Covid-19 isolation conditions, a good number of parents have commented to me in the last couple of weeks about how hard it is to get children learning at home.

Comments have included... *They really don't want to,
they don't sit still,
they won't do the job properly,
they just rush it, they didn't understand and they argued...
Oh it's too hard for me!*

All of these comments are valid, supporting children's learning is difficult whether it's a teacher here at school or a family member helping someone sitting at the kitchen table. Learning is hard and sometimes it's not very interesting.

There are a few key things to remember though. First and foremost, you are and always will be your child's first teacher. You taught them to walk and talk before they came to school. Under your direction they learnt to dress themselves, clean their teeth, brush their hair and to be a good person, to mention only a few. I think a number of parents have been far too hard on themselves when they say, "I can't teach them anything."

Remember too though, we've had at least four years training to do the job we do. Most of us have also had years of practice and what's more, we have access to a lot of different resources that help us to make the learning interesting and even fun!

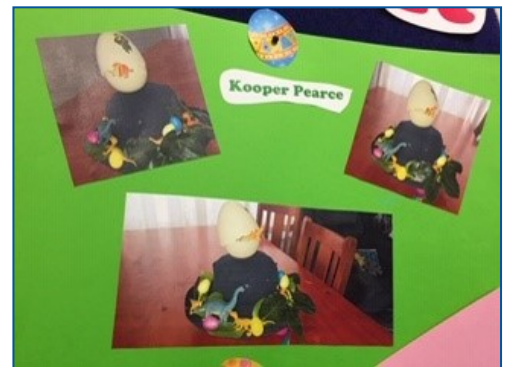

As a learning community there are some very valuable points we can take from this. Parents are a very important partner in student learning and what's more student learning is best achieved when parents and teachers work together.

Lastly, I would like to take this opportunity to acknowledge all of our parents, who are all doing the very best they can to support our school. Thank you very much for your help and let's ensure we continue to work closely together and to the best of our ability at this difficult time.

Bothwell District School Farm Update.

The cleaning up of the farm area is continuing with many of the broken fences being pulled down from inside the boundary. I think Mr O'Toole had us pull down too many by the look of Mr Webb's face when he and Mr O'Toole were talking. The area where the hazelnut trees are going to be planted has been mapped and pegged and the different varieties have all been tagged. While cleaning up in the paddock, Andrew and Mr O'Toole found a toy whale that was amongst the rubbish. Without telling Keeley or Danielle about the toy, Andrew challenged the girls to come up with the best looking whale by using only the rubbish found in the paddock. The girls were not happy when they saw the toy whale and after seeing how well Danielle and Keeley can throw a farm gate about, Mr O'Toole wasn't about to argue.

If you look real hard, squint and turn your head to the right it kind of looks like a whale.
